Singapore has done well over the last 5 decades since independence to build a world class health-care system that delivers affordable, accessible and quality healthcare to its people at relatively low levels of healthcare expenditure nationally. While many of its policies have stood the test of time, some have had unintended consequences. Covid-19 left an indelible mark on the healthcare system and Singapore faces challenges with a rapidly ageing population, increasing chronic medical conditions and rising healthcare costs. As it continues to transform to meet future challenges, are there lessons for us from our neighbouring countries and can our healthcare success story be replicated elsewhere as we embark on our global health journey?
